Although traveling for leisure is off the table at the moment, it's never too early to start dreaming of future trips. Given that many of us have been largely confined to our homes and immediate communities for the past few months, the prospect of venturing somewhere with wide open spaces, close to nature and in an entirely different climate is more than appealing.

If you've got your fingers crossed for a winter wonderland vacation at the end of the year or in early 2021, you might consider treating yourself and your travelling companions by checking into one of these grand hotels. Whether you're one for the ski slopes or prefer kicking back and scanning the skies for the Northern Lights, these digs will let you bask in the snowy glow in luxurious fashion.

The hotel's funky design extends from the rooms to the common areas

• For a chic chalet stay in the Trois Vallées ski resort of Méribel, you can't go wrong with this new opening. Designed by French interior designer Pierre Yovanovitch, the five-star ski-in, ski-out boutique resort boasts 55 guest rooms and suites done up in a contemporary alpine style. Playful pops of colour and geometric furnishings accent wood and stone materials, and most rooms come with balconies with dramatic views of the slopes. There's also an indoor and outdoor pool, gym, bar and two restaurants: Biananeve's signature is Italian cuisine (think dishes such as spaghetti al branzino and pizza with truffle sauce and arugula) while Beefbar's focus on rare cuts of steak will delight meat-lovers. There's also the Kid's Club and Teens Lab with plenty of activities to keep young ones entertained.
